//

The team at Innerspace were fantastic to deal with and I would highly recommend using them again in the future. They took into consideration how our team members needed to interact and use space differently and they sought out the right solutions to meet those needs. Not only was the quality of products offered the best we came across, their level of service during all stages of design, selection and installation was exceptional."

The ANL Building at the University of Queensland focuses on creating a physical environment and identity that allows the School of Chemical Engineering to reinforce its distinctive strengths – outwardly open and transparent, and inwardly intense and focused.

A key trait of the School is its culture – one based on open and collaborative relationships between students, teachers, researchers and the wider industry. This openness is linked by a sense of shared discovery – whether students and staff in learning environments, or researchers and industry in proof-of-concept experimental spaces.

This culture and openness is supported by the ultra flexible and high quality products provided by Innerspace through a consultative process with the end user client at UQ. The product selection reflects the creation of modern and flexible teaching spaces for group or individual work that stand up to the rigours of long term everyday use in a prominent tertiary education institution.

MPC Kinetic is a future focused Australian company that provides essential infrastructure services and solutions in the renewable energy sector. Innerspace was engaged directly by property owner Northshore Group to consult and provide workplace furniture solutions in collaboration with designer Amok Studio.

The new space provides a modern, open plan environment in a revitalised heritage precinct. Innerspace provided technology capable Herman Miller Optimis workstations that integrated aesthetically within the building and functionally to meet MPC Kinetic's ongoing needs. This was supported by a selection of task seating, meeting tables and seating as well as mobile storage from our local stocking program in Queensland to meet an accelerated project program.
